The Hunt for Hannibal's Treasure

Elephants laboriously climb a snow-covered mountain, driven by men in Roman garb who are transporting the treasure of the legendary Roman general Hannibal. Because the path up the mountain is becoming increasingly tortuous, the men decide to stow part of the treasure in a cave.

2000 years later, two youngsters and a dog are in search of the treasure, which they find ensconced deep within a cave behind glacier ice that's thousands of years old. The two youngsters are Fred Fox and his friend Roman Zenkert. Beside himself with excitement at the prospect of finding the treasure, Roman provokes a life-threatening rock slide while hacking at the ice.

30 years later: someone has broken into Fred's construction trailer and stolen the plans to his newest invention: a solar-powered paraglider. Further, the thieves have taken three little puppies hostage to get from Fred what they really came for: the map to get to Hannibal's treasure...

Fred, 11-year old Laila, her aunt Yasemin and Fred's dog Cooky hunt for the thieves and try to rescue the puppies as well as the plans for the paraglider. It's only when they reach the thieves' hideout in an old castle that they realize who's behind the evil plan and what danger they really got themselves into. They are taken prisoners by evil Roman Zenkert, who has grown up to become an international art and antiques thief and who has only one goal in mind: to find the way back to Hannibal's cave and secure the ancient treasure for himself. The adventure comes to a dramatic showdown in the Alps... will Fred be able to stop Roman from putting his evil plan into action?
